What is STAR?

The Stress and Anxiety Research Society (STAR) is a multidisciplinary international organization of researchers who share interests in theoretical, experimental and applied aspects of anxiety, stress and coping. Its members, from over 40 countries, meet annually to present and exchange research findings and clinical applications on a wide range of stress and anxiety related problems.

STAR conferences provide a unique opportunity to learn, not only about stress and anxiety, but also how psychology is studied and practiced throughout the world. STAR has been exceedingly active in providing an opportunity to share research and clinical findings in an international forum.

The STAR International Conferences

The Annual STAR International Conference is one of the most prestigious world conferences focusing on research into stress, anxiety and related phenomena. The conference is multidisciplinary, spanning fields related to psychology, health sciences, medicine and nursing, psychiatry, social work, epidemiology, economics, law and public policy.

STAR conferences are very collegial and provide plenty of opportunities for discussions, exchanges of ideas and professional and interpersonal networking. Every year STAR conferences attract many of the most world-renowned researchers in the field of anxiety, stress and coping.

The 35th STAR International Conference (2014)

The 35th STAR Conference offers the opportunity to present research findings and to share working experience with colleagues from countries all around the world, to strengthen current networks and build new ones.

Your participation and scientific contribution can broaden and deepen our understanding of stress, anxiety and related issues.
